

1 us who appeared at that meeting were called on to say
2 something or another.

3 And when I got up I was subjected to a barrage 4 of questions about the possibility of lowering the 5 voting age. One of the other candidates, surprisingly
6 perhaps, was the head of the Political Science Department
7 at Frostburg State College. She had obviously trained her 8 students well. They knew something about what was to take 9 place here in Annapolis, and they were prepared with 10 questions.

11 I got a big kick out of answering or parrying
12 the questions which were thrown to me by those young 13 people really, more than I did from the adults in the 14 audience.

15 But one of the things out of which I got most 16 enjoyment and most information was the fact that when we 17 were finished, I was told that that day the students of 18 Frostburg State College had taken a poll among themselves
19 with respect to that which we were about to do in Anna-
20 polis some months later, and that they had voted two to one
21 in favor of retaining the voting age at 21.
